Will there ever be a nerve 2

Nerve pain can range from a sharp, stabbing pain to a mild tingling. Doctors will run tests to determine the underlying cause and the extent of the nerve pain while determining any health conditions or diseases. Medical conditions that cause nerve pain include peripheral neuropathy, arthritis, stroke and spinal injury.Topical TreatmentsTopical treatments are applied to the surface of the skin. For example, capsaicin is a topical treatment made of hot chili peppers, and when it's rubbed on the skin there is an initial burning sensation that subsides and eases pain in some patients. Another topical treatment is an oil made from St. John's wort. Many patients use creams containing lidocaine to numb the area.Oral MedicationsOral medications are another option for easing nerve pain. Over-the-counter pain relievers can help and don't require a prescription. Doctors may prescribe anti-seizure meds that have proven results in some nerve pain patients, but there can be side effects of dizziness and fatigue. Doctors sometimes prescribe stronger pain meds, but they can lead to dependency and addiction.Massage BenefitsMassage can be especially effective in treating nerve pain in feet and toes and an alternative option for back nerve pain treatment. Massage calms tension and helps some patients with nerve pain by manipulating muscles and tense areas of the body. No prescription is needed. It might take more than one massage to feel the true benefits. A series of massages lasting an hour or more have proven beneficial in former studies.Transcutaneous Electrical Nerve Stimulation (TENS)Doctors might perform TENS for nerve pain on a patient in the doctor's office. This transcutaneous electrical nerve stimulation involves the use of electrodes to send a current through the body using different frequencies. The procedure lasts about 30 minutes and is usually done everyday for a month.Yoga and ExerciseYoga is a natural way to treat nerve pain. The regular practice of yoga increases flexibility, builds muscular strength and helps relieve stress. Some people have found that yoga improves posture, reduces nerve pain and helps with balance. Since many people with peripheral neuropathy and other nerve pain in the lower extremities have balance issues, working on balance is key. Regular exercise, in general, is oftentimes recommended. The increased blood flow from exercise can ease the extent of pain and reduce inflammation. Gentle exercise programs like yoga and tai chi can be effective in dealing with pain. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET We interviewed Dave Franco in a roundtable discussion about his upcoming film "Nerve." If you haven't read Part 1 of our interview, you can do so here. Here are the highlights from Part 2 of our interview. Catherine: After watching this film, do you want teens to think twice about what they post online and what they are willing to do to get those views and likes? Dave: I think the movie is good in the sense of being a cautionary tale, but it doesn't feel preachy or hammer home this message. It presents everything as is and allows the audience to walk away. It's one of those films that stays with you after you leave the theater and makes you analyze how you use social media and look back at times that you were mean to people and hopefully that will change your ways in the future. Nerdlocker: Did you get to ride that fancy motorcycle? Dave: I did learn how to ride a motorcycle and they gave me about two weeks to learn how to do it. I got to a point, where in an empty parking lot, I felt like Evel Knievel and you throw me in the streets of New York and you throw Emma Roberts in the back of the bike. They obviously didn't let me the do the sequence where I'm doing the sequence blindfolded. It seems to be the scene that everyone's talking about. There are certain shots, where it is me riding the bike, but watching the film, you really wouldn't know so maybe I shouldn't have risked my life doing that, but hopefully it looks natural. Film Geek Army: I hate when movies show technology that looks impossible, but watching this film, I felt like this technology could exist today and function that well. Especially with Pokemon Go with the crowds of people out with their phones, the exact same thing. Dave: That's what makes it that much scarier: you think about all the other young adult movies that have been made in the past 10 years, and they all take place in this dystopian world, where reality is elevated. Even though the game Nerve doesn't exist, this thing could pop up tomorrow and no one would be surprised. To go further, the themes of the movie—kids in real life and the movie are willing to put themselves in serious danger just to get more views, and more likes, and it's horrifying. I can't imagine if I was in high school and had this at my disposal. High school is hard enough as is. I can't imagine everyday reading about my peers saying horrible things about me. Interviewer 2: How did the directors' influence on the movie, impact you as an actor and made you be proud to be a part of it? Dave: A lot of what they did was in post-production. In the beginning, they were telling me their vision and what they wanted the film to be, but I didn't fully see that until I saw the final product, because of the graphics they put it in. It makes it jump off the screen and makes it feel fresh and different and the music is incredible. A list of songs that no one has ever heard before, but each song feels like a classic. For all those elements to work together, it's a miracle when a movie turns out well. We're going up against movies like "Jason Bourne" and I don't want this movie to come and go because it's actually good and it has something to say. Catherine: If this game existed in real life, would you be a Watcher or a Player? And how far would you be willing to go? Dave: If I had to be one, I'd be a Watcher and wouldn't play at all. I'm pretty lame in my everyday life these days. I used to take a lot more risks, but it got to a point where I look back at my childhood and I question how anyone survives, because we all do such dumb shit and I think we can recollect a handful of instances where we were all that close to death. So at this point, I just want to stay in my safe zone and not put myself in harm's way when I don't need to. "Nerve" hits theaters Wednesday, July 27.
